Key Highlights from the Non-stick Coatings Market Report:

The surge in Demand for Cookware Application

- Generally, cookware is made of stainless steel, aluminum, cast iron, glass, program, and ceramic, whereas bakeware is made from flexible silicone. The notable properties of non-stick coatings have been popularized for numerous food-grade non-stick applications, including cookware, such as pots and pans.
- Non-stick cookware is coated with polytetrafluoroethylene (PTFE), also known as Teflon. Teflon-coated cookware is easy to use and clean owing to its non-stick surface.

Asia-Pacific to Hold a Significant Market Share

- The APAC region dominates the non-stick coatings market globally, owing to the mounting average household income and improving quality of life in the region. The region's population is increasing, ensuing an increased number of houses. This is consequently raising the demand for household appliances, including kitchen appliances and cookware.
- India and China are the largest consumers of non-stick coatings in the region. Their demands for cookware have grown, notably since most local consumers are undergoing a full transition of adopting cookware with better quality. Thus, an expansive range of colorful, advanced cookware functions, such as pressure cookers of various materials, non-stick cookers, electric hot pots, induction cookers, and other cookware products, are being used more recurrently.
