Beyond its importance as an engine of the automotive industry, Detroit has become a major hub for technology companies, which interestingly combine with the strength that the fashion, art and food industries are taking on in this city.

The airlines currently serve the Detroit market with non-stop flights from Bajio (Leon), Mexico City, Monterrey, and Queretaro, focused primarily on creating air bridges between highly industrial and dynamic destinations, to facilitate economic trade, and promote the development of business in Mexico.

Aeromexico and Delta Air Lines thus position themselves at the forefront of the industry, offering more and better flight connection options to destinations relevant to the financial and tourism sectors.
