

Didier Elzinga, CEO & Founder, Culture Amp

Didier Elzinga is the CEO and co-founder of Culture Amp - the Culture First employee feedback company. Launched in 2011, it's one of the world's fastest growing technology startups and has helped companies around the world harness the power of employee feedback to drive positive change. With offices in Melbourne, San Francisco, New York and London, Didier is proudly growing Culture Amp into a Culture First company at scale.

Before starting Culture Amp, he was the CEO of Rising Sun Pictures where he oversaw the production of visual effects for popular films such as Lord of the Rings and The Last Samurai. Additionally, he was the founder of Rising Sun Research (winner of a Technical Academy Award), and a Non-Executive Director of Tourism Australia.

Today, Didier is committed to making the world of work better for all, and to providing innovative product solutions and ideas to Culture Amp's diverse client base of over 2,000 companies. Didier is a sought-after speaker in the areas of culture-building, the importance of employee feedback, and fostering creativity in the workplace. With his prolific storytelling style, he has presented at revolutionary conferences worldwide including Culture By Design and Pause Fest. He is currently a non-executive director at The Atlassian Foundation and The Alfred Research Foundation.
