

LIDDS continues to grow with new hire to manage pre-clinical trials

Erwin Brenndörfer has joined LIDDS as Project Manager Translational Medicine and will be responsible for managing LIDDS growing portfolio of pre-clinical studies as well as continuing the development of the NanoZolid® technology and identifying new drugs that can be combined with NanoZolid®.

Erwin Brenndörfer has extensive experience in managing pre-clinical oncology studies gained during his time as a project leader for pre-clinical drug development at Medivir. Erwin will be working in the pre-clinical R&D team led by Martin Johansson.

Erwin has a PhD from Heinrich Heine University in Düsseldorf, Germany, and after completing his studies Erwin worked at Karolinska Institutet where he was an Assistant Professor of Infectious Diseases.

-We are very excited that Erwin has joined the LIDDS team. Our growing portfolio of pre-clinical projects means we also need to continue to grow and strengthen our organization. Erwin's experience and expertise are a great fit for LIDDS and he is a valuable addition to the LIDDS team, says Monica Wallter, CEO of LIDDS.

-LIDDS is an exciting company with a great team of people. I see a lot of potential in the NanoZolid® technology and I'm looking forward to using my skills and expertise to further develop LIDDS and the NanoZolid® technology, says Erwin Brenndörfer.

Erwin has been published more than 20 times in scientific publications, mainly on the Hepatitis C virus, and has been a frequent speaker at scientific conferences.
